WARFARE THREAT BRINGS U. S. ACTION IN STEEL DISPUTE

Board Reopens Court Battle To Enforce New Deal Law

CITES STEEL FIRM

Wants Company To Halt Attempts To Bar Self-Organization Work

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON July 6—Warning that industrial warfare threatens the government stepped into the steel picture today as the struggle over unionization in the $5 000 000 industry headed rapidly into its first crucial phases

With John L. Lewis spurring the drive to organize all 500 000 steel workers into one big union in defiance of the bitter opposition of employers the national labor relations board reopened a fight in the courts to force steel companies to accept the national labor relations act as a means of keeping peace

The board announced it was petitioning the federal circuit court of appeals at New Orleans today in a new effort to enforce the act against the big Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp

Bars Company Union

The act among other things guarantees the right of collective bargaining seeks to outlaw employer-dominated unions and lists unfair practices for which employers could be penalized It is now the subject of court battles in which its constitutionality is being challenged and defended

The labor board some time ago issued an order directing Jones & Laughlin to cease alleged interference with its employes attempts at self organization and to take back 10 discharged employes at its Aliquippa Pa plant

The board asked the court at New Orleans to enforce this order The court refused declaring that the steel laborers were engaged in manufacture not interstate commerce and that the Constitution gives the federal government no power to regulate labor relations in manufacture

Cites Court Decision

The court pointed to the supreme court decision which struck down the labor provisions of the Guffey coal control act on the ground that they were an invasion of states rights

The labor board in its petition today for a rehearing argued that the Guffey act's type of regulation is different from the employment of means to protect commerce itself provided in the national labor relations act

Unless the threat of industrial warfare is alleviated the board argued workers may directly and intentionally interrupt interstate commerce

The board's move was the latest major development with a bearing on the struggle over unionization which is fraught with potential importance for the future history of the American labor movement

With employers reiterating their intention to maintain the open shop John L. Lewis United Mine Workers leader and head of the committee for industrial organization planned to strike the keynote of the unionization drive at 9 30 o'clock (Marion time) tonight in a radio speech entitled Industrial Democracy in Steel

Drive Is On

At Homestead Pa. speakers opened the unionization effort yesterday Foremost among them was Thomas Kennedy lieutenant governor of Pennsylvania and secretary treasurer of the United Mine Workers who promised government relief to any workers who might lose their jobs

Kennedy asserted that economic royalists had forced low wages and long hours upon the workers because they were unorganized

The internal quarrel in the American Federation of Labor between craft and industrial unionists may come to a head Wednesday The federation's executive council dominated by craft unionists will meet then to decide whether to suspend Lewis and 1[illegible] unions affiliated with him for going ahead with the industrial union in defiance of the council

DROUTH SENDS GRAIN SOARING

Wheat and Rye Up Five Cents Corn Four and Oats Three Limits Set by Pit

ALL AT SEASON'S HIGH

Destruction Includes Seventh Consecutive Failure in Spring Wheat Section

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO July 6—Drouth stimulated feverish speculative buying in the nation's markets today hoisting prices of all major grains —wheat corn oats and rye—the highest they could go under existing trade regulations

Wheat shot up five cents a bushel corn four oats three and rye five

All prices were at new highs for the season

Trade reports were that drouth and heat had destroyed crops in many sections of the United States resulting in the seventh consecutive crop failure in the spring wheat belt Canadian advices indicated grain growing in sections of the prairie provinces also was damaged seriously

The wild rush to buy all grains at the start of trading in Chicago resulted in a virtual stalemate of the market Prices were at the permissable limits and would be buyers frantically trying to acquire holdings were unable to bid any higher There were few sellers at the sharp advance and therefore little business Trading in corn came to a complete standstill for a time

July wheat was bid up to around $1 06 and December was around $1 07 within five cents of it 1937 peak Wheat prices have advanced more than 12 cents a bushel in two weeks and were now 23 to 25 cents higher than they were a year ago

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES July 6 — America's first peace time spy Harry Thomas Thompson former United States navy yeoman was sentenced by Federal Judge Leon Yankwich today to 15 years in federal prison

The judge in sentencing Thompson convicted of conspiracy to sell secret navy information to an agent of Japan said he took into consideration the youth of the defendant in failing to impose the maximum sentence of 20 years He said also that Thompson was not of the criminal type

The court however severely denounced the convicted spy declaring the highest quality of man is loyalty and we have the right to expect loyalty to all human associations

You've been convicted of a most serious offense which strikes at the very foundation of the nation espionage in matters relating to the national defense Your defense was of a type which any intelligent jury would and which his jury did consider puerile

You were paid to secure information—secret information—as to naval matters and movements which help the kingdom of Japan

Two burglars ransacked the residence of Harold Dickerson of 797 Merkle avenue Saturday night about 11 o'clock gathered loot and after raiding the refrigerator left shortly before the arrival of police It is believed that the burglars enjoyed an impromptu lunch while Mr Dickerson called the police from a neighbor's residence An empty salad container was found in a vacant lot about 200 feet to the rear of the home

PAY AS YOU GO RELIEF ASKED

106 Ohio Business Groups, Including Marion and Kenton C of C Voice Beliefs

SENT TO LEGISLATORS

Claim State's Revenue Is Sufficient To Meet Obligations Without New Taxes

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS O July 6 The inter-organization conference — a group of 106 Ohio business associations formed to study taxation recommended today financing relief on a pay as you go basis and removal from the relief rolls of all employable persons refusing employment

In a final report on the relief emergency mailed to all members of the legislature and to Gov Martin L Davey the conference asserted that revenues would be sufficient to meet all obligations of the state for the last half of 1936 without the imposition of any new taxes

The pamphlet estimated that the state's obligations would total $102 000 000 and its revenues $106 000 000 for the year

Set Cost at $99 615 000

In a first report issued in September of 1935 the conference had estimated probable expenditures for 1936 at $99 615 000

The new report discussed the relief problem in detail and made suggestions for its solution

It recommended a relief program from August through December of $10 400 000 including an appropriation of $5 340 000 from the state and suggested that if any county's share of the above amount is not sufficient to carry its relief load the county should be required to furnish whatever above this amount is necessary from additional local resources

The report recommended also that state assistance to local unemployment relief be looked upon as purely a temporary expedient to be discontinued at the earliest possible date and that local relief funds should be derived from the collection of delinquent taxes balances in county relief funds sale of bonds already authorized to be issued and tax levies voted for relief purposes

Oppose Tax Change

The report also warned against changes in the sales tax or other tax laws in anticipation of increased revenues

The statistical studies made by the inter-organization conference do not support any net estimate for the sales tax greater than $55 000 000 it said

In addition to various professional and business associations the conference includes in its membership the Chambers of Commerce of Akron Lima Chillicothe Cincinnati Cleveland Columbus Dayton East Liverpool Elyria Findlay Greenfield Hamilton, Kent Kenton Lakewood Loudenville Mansfield Marietta Marion Mt Vernon Newark Portsmouth Springfield Toledo Warren Youngstown and the Ohio Chamber of Commerce

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO July 6 Edward Freed part owner of the Nut House north side night life spot surrendered to police today to be questioned about the love affairs and slaying Thursday noon of Audrey Vallette 24 year old platinum blond butterfly

Freed appeared at the Hudson avenue station at 9 45 a m (eastern standard time) with his attorney Abraham Marovitz He wore a dark suit and a cap showed no outward appearance of the illness which his attorney had reported

Not With His Wife

He was not accompanied by his wife Ruth whom police have sought since her photograph was pointed to as resembling that of the woman who visited Miss Vallette's apartment just before she was slain

Freed was taken to the office of Police Capt Andrew Barry

Freed refused to answer key questions asked in an effort to solve the mystery He said he last saw his wife at 4 a m Thursday

He refused to discuss her further and refused to say anything about relations with the murdered party girl

When I am released he said I will try to get in touch with my wife and do what I can to clear up this situation

Authorities were not definite as to whether they would hold Freed After preliminary questioning by Capt Andrew Barry of the Hudson avenue station where he surrendered Freed was taken to the state attorney's office for further interrogation The most plausible procedure seemed to be that he would be detained as a material witness

Before being closeted with Capt Barry Freed told inquirers he had neither seen nor heard from his wife Ruth since the time Miss Vallette was shot in the chest in a near north side hotel apartment He asserted he did not know where she was

Freed asserted that since Thursday noon he had been staying with relatives in Chicago

I last saw Ruth either late Wednesday or early Thursday he said I had a business engagement and left her at our home "

He refused to discuss his acquaintanceship with the slain woman

Can't Say Anything

I can't tell you a damn thing fellows until I find out what I'm all about Freed told newspaper men

He at first tried to dodge camera men but on Marovitz's instructions posed with the attorney and later with Capt Barry

Barry had called in police squads searching for the Freeds after Marovitz told him he would surrender Freed today

Rumors that Miss Vallette had been the victim of a blackmail ring failed to shake the theory that she had been killed by a jealous wife

Capt Barry said detectives could find nothing to indicate Miss Vallette engaged in any pursuits but those of a party girl

BRITAIN BUILDS FLYING FLEET

Giant Four Motored Planes Prepared To Cross Atlantic Next Year.

By The Associated Press

PORTSMOUTH, England, July 6—A new British air hub was in the making today while mechanics tuned up the first flying boat of a promised Atlantic fleet.

The giant four-motored plane, prototype of the air liner with which Britain is to face the Atlantic voyage, made its first appearance on the slip-way at Rochester this week. Others are nearing completion.

Work of making Langstone harbor a combined land and marine base for empire and transatlantic routes is expected to begin in another month. By this step, the United Kingdom expects to advance a program of civil aviation aimed at putting the empire on top of the flying world.

Early next year, it is being predicted here, a service to America will be under way, with two American and two British flying boats arriving and departing weekly.

The Portsmouth town council has already approved the project of the airport, to be the largest of its kind in the world and to cost close to $6,000,000. Langstone harbor, which has Portsmouth harbor to the west and Chichester harbor to the east, would become a large inland lake. Several hundred acres of ground would be prepared for handling land planes.

Progress on the picka-back airplane, a combination in which a "mother" plane will carry on its back a smaller long range seaplane for "launching" at high altitude, is secret.

Britain's first efforts toward trans-Atlantic service are expected to be directed at Bermuda via the Canary Islands, with the North Atlantic crossing to be attempted later.

Expansion within the empire air service proper this year is to include substitution of Imperial Airways flying boats for Australian planes from Singapore to Australia; use of flying boats on a service along the east coast of Africa instead of flying over central Africa with land planes; more efficient service in general through increased subsidies, and carrying of all first class mail by air without surcharge.

A service between Bermuda and New York also is planned while new link services between the Sudan and west Africa and between Penang and Hongkong are now operating.

J. B. VIRDEN, PIONEER MARION GARDENER, DIES

Was Superintendent of Epworth Sunday School 20 Years; Passes Away at 92.

Infirmities of age claimed James Bruce Virden, 92-year-old retired real estate dealer, flower fancier and lifelong resident of Marion county Saturday at 6:45 a. m. at his home at 1171 East Church street.

The funeral was conducted this afternoon at Epworth M. E. church where Mr. Virden was a member and a former general superintendent of the Sunday school for many years.

He was engaged in the insurance and real estate business in Marion over a long period of the 47 years he was a resident of the city, operating an office located on South Main street.

J. B. Virden

Until recent years much of Mr. Virden's leisure time was devoted to flowers, and his interest in horticulture as a hobby is responsible to a great extent for the improved appearance of the flower beds of Garfield park.

In late years he spent much of his time in improving the grounds of his own home and until 10 days ago he was able to walk occasionally on the lawn of his home.

Pioneer Truck Farmer

Mr. Virden was probably the first truck farmer and garden plant salesman in Marion county. More than 50 years ago, while he was engaged in farming west of Marion and before any florist and gardening business was started in the city he made trips into Marion to sell fresh garden produce and flower and vegetable plants.

He was an ardent Prohibitionist and was one of the leaders in the prohibition movement in Marion county.

He was one of the oldest members of Epworth M. E. church, and had one of the longest records of service as an officer of the Sunday school. For 20 years, not consecutive, he served as the general superintendent of the Sunday school. Both Mr. and Mrs. Virden enrolled in the Powell Sunday school class of the church shortly after coming to Marion and maintained their membership throughout the years.

Mr. Virden was a farmer in Montgomery township in Marion county for 16 years after his marriage on Nov. 20, 1872 to Miss Caroline Lee, daughter of John and Mary Ann Lee of Salt Rock township. They celebrated their sixty-second wedding anniversary last November.

Former Teachers

Both Mr. Virden and his wife taught in the Marion county schools, Mr. Virden having taught in schools west of Marion for a few years after he completed his education at the old Central building which is now a part of the Central Junior High school.

He was actively interested in the Chautauqua movement in Marion for many years and was one of the men who organized the city's first Chautauqua programs.

He was born Dec. 2, 1843, at Meeker to William J. Virden, a native of Coolsprings, Del., and Sarah Ann Vorhis Virden, a native of Lebanon, O.

Surviving with the widow are a daughter, Mrs. Cora B. Rexroth, who lives at home, and one son, William L. Virden of Lisbon, O.

The funeral was conducted at 2:30 p. m. today at the Epworth M. E. church by Rev. Franklin G. Markley, pastor. Burial was made in the Marion cemetery.

Homer Waddell, Earl T. Smart, John H. Clark, Charles Aiken, John Bain and Sylvester Larkin, all members of Epworth M. E. church, served as pallbearers.

Keeler are in Elderton and Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Keeler will leave to attend the funeral Thursday afternoon. Dr. Keeler visited in Marion several years ago.

DEMOCRATIC CLUB TO MEET TUESDAY

TWO MORE SOUGHT IN BIG BOND THEFT

Five Added to 13 Already in Custody in $2,046,000 Larceny Case.

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK, July 6—Federal agents out to destroy an international bond - theft syndicate credited with two phantom-like snatches totaling $2,046,000, hunted today two men whose arrest would bring to 18 the number in custody.

Agents of the federal bureau of investigation who rounded up five men, including a material witness in the William Hamm, Jr., kidnaping case in St. Paul, had hoped a series of quiet week-end forays also would snare that pair.

Although the continued hunt for these two-unidentified — was unsuccessful so far, the officers retrieved two $100,000 treasury notes from a bag checked at Grand Central terminal.

Rhea Whitley, New York representative of the federal bureau, said the check for this bag was found in possession of Morris Rolsner, the Hamm kidnaping witness.

This recovery in addition to others, including $440,000 worth of securities picked up in Europe several weeks ago, brought the total retrieved to about $950,000.

Eleven men had been arrested here and abroad when the New York raids took place. Efforts to market the "hot" bonds had carried ring members as far as Paris and the Riviera.

Rolsner and the other four seized here Friday and Saturday—Dave Berman, Moe Sedway, Jack Greenberg, alias Green, and Benjamin Espy, all of New York—faced arraignment today on charges of handling the stolen securities.

A towing basin has been installed in the engineering college at New York university for testing models of seaplane hulls and floats.

AKRON PILOT VICTOR IN BALLOON CONTEST

Reports Landing His Bag 385 Miles from Denver in National Race.

By The Associated Press

DENVER, Colo., July 6—Frank A. Trotter, veteran pilot of lighter-than-air craft, apparently was the victor today in the 24th annual national balloon race.

Trotter, piloting the Goodyear entry from Akron, O., reported to race headquarters he had landed at Presho, S. D., approximately 385 miles from Denver.

He was the only one of the five balloonists who took-off here Friday night to find good fortune in variable winds which kept the others from drifting out of the state.

Logs and barographs of the balloonists must be checked in Washington by the federal bureau of standards and the National Aeronautical association before the winner is announced officially.

Second place apparently was won by the Great Lakes exposition balloon from Cleveland, third and fourth by the United States navy bags and fifth by the United States army balloon, which exploded and burned in landing 27 miles southeast of Denver Saturday.

The Eastern division of the county Democratic club, which comprises [illegible] and [illegible] townships, [illegible] and residents of Marion and nearby counties will be welcomed at the rally.

BOTH PARTIES MAKE PLANS FOR CAMPAIGN

preparation for Nov. 3 were likely to continue with little abatement.

Mr. Roosevelt, in his talk with Farley, was expected to go over in further detail plans for a whirlwind drive discussed at [illegible] last week.

Set Up Headquarters

Fast and continuous activity also was indicated by the setting up of opposing campaign headquarters in New York.

Both Farley and John D. M. Hamilton, Republican national chairman, were expected to start work in New York this week. Farley is both state and national Democratic chairman.

Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, Detroit radio priest and supporter of Rep. William Lemke's union party presidential campaign, entered New Jersey yesterday to make an unannounced address to officials of his National Union for Social Justice.

The session in Trenton, closed to press and public, was attended by 1,500 officers of the units of the National Union in Jersey.

Fr. Coughlin later said he was visiting various states to meet leaders of his movement. He urged officials to elect congressional candidates favoring the union's endorsement, and continued his attack against President Roosevelt.

Have To Pay Back

"Roosevelt has placed a 32 billion dollar burden on you," he said to his followers, "and it has to be paid back by your labor."

Another weekend political development was a statement by George L. Berry, president of Labor's Non-partisan league, in which he said union leaders representing 3,000,000 voters had been enrolled to work for Mr. Roosevelt's reelection.

"Considering the brief period within which the league has been organized," Berry said, "this is an astonishing enrollment and attests pointedly the determination of labor for the cause to which we are pledged."

NEW FAIR TRADE LAW FACES DOUBLE TEST

Cleveland and Toledo Firms To Challenge Drug Price Measure.

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, O., July 6—While an official predicted a general rise in retail prices when Ohio's new fair trade practice law becomes effective Thursday, at least two tests of one of its sections developed today.

George Sheridan, executive secretary of the Ohio Council of Retail Merchants, predicting the price rise would be particularly noticeable in pharmaceutical and toilet supplies, added that drug companies in Toledo and Cleveland planned test suits to challenge the constitutionality of section three. It provides that if a manufacturer contracts with an Ohio retailer for a minimum price on an article, all retail dealers of the state must adhere to that minimum.

However, he said, "it affects only a few lines and is largely self-regulating."

The Ohio Pharmaceutical association indicated it would wait to see how drugstores generally reacted before taking any steps.

Promoted by the Retail Druggists association, the law is designed to protect both owners of trade-marked products and distributors, and the general public as well against cut rates to drive trade and substitution of inferior products.

Under its provisions, no products can be sold or offered below the price stipulated by contract between producers and retailers or wholesalers and retailers, provided the commodities are in open competition with similar products.

500 BEETLE TRAPS PLACED IN MARION

Federal Entomologist Seeks Specimens for Study of Insect's Prevalence.

In an effort to gather specimens of the Japanese beetle for the purpose of studying its habits and prevalence, a federal entomologist working out of the Ohio department of agriculture, was in Marion today distributing 500 traps to capture some of the insects.

The traps were being placed in private gardens and flower beds and in the city parks. They are small wire traps painted green on the outside and white on the inside. The white interior, which is usually chemically treated, attracts the insects. Postmaster L. L. Lamborn guided the entomologist in placing.

The department of agriculture is studying the habits of the beetles, their time of appearance, manner of flight, what attracts them and the amount of damage they do. The insects were first observed in this country in 1916 in Burlington county, N. J. The beetles have not become pests in Marion and County Farm Agent S. L. Anderson said he has received no complaints about them, nor has the federal department of agriculture reported the spread of them to this section.

Rightists, estimated at 25,000, crowded the area about the Arch of Triumph and cheered De La Rocque as he placed a wreath on the tomb. After the ceremony, the Nationalist leader went home but his followers began their daily demonstration against the popular front government of Premier Leon Blum.

Seeking to break through the steel-helmeted line of mobile guards, the demonstrators attacked the ranks in the Champs Elysees.

Sixteen Nationalists were arrested in clashes between small groups. A police statement declared 31 officers were injured.

The mobs raised fears in Socialist quarters the Nationalists were planning further disorders to coincide with the leftist celebration of Bastille day, July 14.

Voss and his wife did not find the treasure chest until last week, although the countryside had echoed for years with tales of "a lot of money buried about the place."

The three Iwers bachelors, William, John and Henry, had lived and died in stark simplicity, with tight lips. They seldom conversed with others. They never talked of their personal affairs. Their home was modest. Their clothes were commonplace.

The "buried money" stories were put down as just rumor until John Iwers' inheritance tax figures—John was second to die, in 1935—came out. When Henry passed out of the picture a few months later, the Voss couple was living with him, caring for him, for he was then past 60.

After that the cousins were summoned to court for questioning about the value of the estate.

"We don't know how much it is worth," Voss said at that time. "We think there is a lot of money there, but we haven't really looked yet."

Judge Urges Search

District Court Judge A. C. Ring suggested a search. Interested relatives joined in.

Thirty-five thousand dollars in securities were found bidden in the house where the aged bachelor lived.

Then an iron box, containing $88,000 in securities, was unearthed. The money was taken to a Davenport bank, and the farm placed under guard to prevent it being overrun by unauthorized treasure seekers and curious.

Last week a second box was found. It was wrapped in a burlap sack, hidden under litter in the machine shed. In it were $7,800 in gold and silver certificates, $61,000 in Iowa municipal bonds, $5,000 in uncashed dividend checks, and $38,000 in certificates issued on the Bank Guaranty fund of South Dakota.

The search brought to light traces of other property, indicating another treasure hunt planned for this week will reveal more holdings.

Relatives who sued to break Henry Iwers' will said they would contend he made it under misrepresentation and that he was improperly cared for by the Voss' at the time of his death.

MURDER TONIGHT

BY LAURENCE W. MEYNELL

(Copyright 1936, Lawrence W. Meynell)

SYNOPSIS: About the only thing Inspector Hylton feels very sure of is that old Arthur Burdett was clubbed to death. The ancient miser's death did not leave any traces of grief on the faces of Hope Enderton's inhabitants. Nearly everybody, even the gentle John Fentons, who keeps the village store, had a grudge against Burdett. But so far the only persons about whom Hylton knows anything suspicious are Dale Shipley, wastrel half nephew of the deceased, and Lumsdale, Burdett's manservant. Hylton has decided to ride to hounds.

* * *

CHAPTER TWENTY
Huntsmen Bold

KINGSLEY HYLTON — despite the social drawback of his ill assorted hunting clothes, largely borrowed from his landlord—was feeling happy. He enjoyed a day's hunting, and it was long enough since he had one.

True his mount was long past the first fine flush of its youth, but Hylton felt instinctively towards the old horse a bond of sympathetic fellowship. He reined back to the outer fringe of the animated little crowd at the Five Ways Post and studied the scene attentively. Mrs. Reeves looked splendid on her big dark bay, he noticed particularly how smart her trim her hair was looking; beside her Nancy Featherstone was on the dowdy side of workmanlike; Reeves, who managed not to see the inspector, looked the thruster that he was, and nobody would have mistaken Dale Shipley for anything but a horseman.

Hylton ran his eye over that quartet of diverse people a score of times. They had all been under one roof, as he knew, when the murder had been announced, and one of them, he was convinced, maybe more than any, knew more about the matter than had been admitted.

A long night's reflection had not made the inspector any more pleased with the way the case was going. True, Lumsdale still had a good deal to explain; true, too, that friend Lumsdale was already, on the inspector's orders, subject to a fairly close though unobstructive supervision; but Hylton had a feeling that he was skimming on the surface of deeper waters than he knew of, and he would not be satisfied until a good deal which he was certain was at present being hidden from him came to light.

Doctor Chambers came tiptutting up on [illegible] eat ungainly brute that had land[illegible] him at various times in practically every ditch in Sussex; he seemed to know everyone and to be popular with them all. It was not a big field, and there was only a sprinkling of pink coats outnumbered by the people in ratcatcher and the usual healthy assortment of sporting farmers in clothes as diverse as their mounts.

"Hounds, gennelmen, please."

The pack, eighteen and a half couple, came pad-padding along, their waving sterns like a feathery forest above them. Hard conditioned hounds these, willing to face briar and bramble and the most punishing of going, sobeit they could do the one thing their nature craved for kill.

Inspector Hylton eyed them reflectively and it crossed his mind that there was a good deal of human life reproduced in miniature in a hunt. The wind freshened a little and men turned to one another and prophesied, divergently, ignorantly and unscientifically, of that most mysterious of all nature's mysterious things—scent.

It was this little puff of freshening wind that carried the first signals of danger to the sleeping vixen in Seven Acre Spinney. She slept, and slept deeply, but, as with all wild things, one of her acute senses remained on almost undiminished guard, and her soft muzzle had hardly done twitching at the danger-laden wind before her eyes opened and she was wide awake

Man!

The vixen lifted a fore paw and licked it where a sharp stone in the bed of a brook had cut the pad a little. Then, as though coming to a sudden decision, she shook herself, turned her muzzle up hill and set off at a great pace as straight as an arrow for Hangman's Holt. The Morechester Hunt was in for the fastest thing of its life.

Kingsley Hylton's hack from the Hoops had not always been a mere hack. It had come down by a long series of successive degradations to that ignominous position: it knew a great deal more about hunting than all the young horses out that day put together, and when it discovered that the man on its back was not altogether a fool at the game it set out to enjoy itself.

Hylton went with the best of them for a mile, but the pace was terrific, and three wide fields of plough put the old hack at the tail of the hunt. The Inspector wasn't sorry; he had never intended to waste all the morning chasing a fox, he was after another sort of killer. Instead of following the other laggards through a field he turned up-hill, trotted along the headland, and finding a convenient gap forced his way on to the gateway in the bottom corner of the road.

There followed a slight argument with the hack whose ancient blood was fired with the excitement of the chase; but Hylton won, and was presently trotting steadily back towards Hope Enderton. The hunt had already travelled in a rough quarter of a circle so he was not as far away from the village as he might have been, and before long he was knocking at the door of Fielden Cottage, which Sergeant White had already pointed out to him as belonging to Dale Shipley.

Mrs. Somers opened the door, and her first cheerful smile at seeing a gentleman in riding clothes (such as they were!) soon yielded to a very different expression when Hylton began to ask questions, and she realized who he must be.

"I'm afraid I'm rather foolish about times and things like that," the Inspector said affably. "I just wanted to get it all quite plain about last Monday night."

"I can't tell you what I don't know."

"Quite so. It's what you do know I want to get at Mrs.—"

"Somers, thank you."

"Well, now, Mrs. Somers, let me see; did Mr. Shipley have dinner here on Monday evening?"

"He did not. He went over to Captain Reeves, where he often does go."

"I suppose he motored over there?"

"No. He walked."

"Walked?"

"That's it. 'Mrs. Somers,' he said to me, 'it's a fine night, and I think I shall walk. I'm giving myself plenty of time.' 'That's right, sir,' I said, 'do'; and that's all there was about it."

"What time was that, Mrs. Somers?"

"A quarter to seven exactly. I heard St. Leonard's strike."

Hylton considered . . . a quarter to seven. Young Shipley certainly had allowed himself plenty of time. The Inspector already knew from an intensive study of a six-inch Ordnance Map of the district that a moderate walker could hardly take longer than twenty minutes to get from Fielden Cottage to the Reeves' place.

"He took his stick?"

"He always does when he goes walking."

"Does Mr. Shipley often go walking in his dinner clothes?"

"Perhaps he doesn't; but what's the harm in folks walking out on a nice night if they've a mind to?"

"I don't say there's any harm in it, Mrs. Somers."

"That's what I think. I must say I can see a deal more harm in ferreting about in other people's business, if you ask me."

The Inspector took his leave of this formidably loyal retainer and mounting his horse trotted gently over to Ferney House. A scurry of dogs greeted him in the drive and kept up an ear splitting din until the door was opened by a maid a deal younger and more susceptible to the presence of a mere male than the excellent Mrs. Somers.

Hylton found no difficulty in persuading her to tell him all she knew about Monday evening.

"I suppose it was rather a rush for you with a party on and everything," he said sympathetically.

"Oh, Mrs. Reeves always gets worried when there's anyone coming, you'd think it was Royalty coming to dinner."

"And Captain Reeves wasn't back till late, was he?"

"Oh, the Captain. He's all right. He was back just about half past five. He came back before from hunting and then went out somewhere again."

"And was back at half past five. I see. And the guests, were they all up to time?"

"No, they weren't. Mrs. Reeves is always on at me about being late, so I made a special effort on Monday, in spite of Cook and her slow oven and everything. The little clock in the hall struck half past seven just as I went past it. And then, of course, when I told them dinner was ready, Mr. Shipley hasn't come, if you please. What's the good of being punctual, I'd like to know?"

A mysterious hair-dressing appointment turns up, tomorrow.

[illegible] a graceful figure and a well turned pair of legs may charm the eye and [illegible] imagination. But too much [illegible] bathing [illegible] They take away the appetite.

A touch of rouge enhanceth the beauty and an indelible pencil is flattering unto the eyes. But a mouth that resembleth a crushed raspberry and cheeks that glow like traffic lights affright the wary male and cause him to go slowly.

All men admire a discreet woman and modesty is a beautiful thing. But a prude is as depressing as wax lilies under a glass bell and as uncomfortable as a horsehair sofa.

Originality and sparkling conversation are refreshing but a damsel that doeth a continuous monologue and never signeth off is as a loud speaker in the apartment next door—a torment to the ears and an affliction to the nerves.

Honesty is a virtue and candor is admirable. But a woman that leaveth nothing unto the imagination writeth finis to her romance. And she that hath not a secret thought is duller than a novel with a time-worn plot.

Wherefore my daughter I charge thee whatsoever thy game be not verbal thine [illegible] but temper all thy ways with discretion. For in love as in politics an extremist is seldom the winner.

Mrs. Thurn Gives Advice on Serving of Vegetables

[illegible] for the building of these [illegible] and placing of cell[illegible] as a [illegible] oxygen thus giving life [illegible] and iodine [illegible] even though needed only in [illegible] quantities. [illegible] is needed for normal growth, good nutrition and the proper functioning of the thyroid [illegible]. If these minerals are included in the diet the bodily needs will be well taken care of.

Leafy vegetables are high in food value. To cook green vegetables and keep them colorful the most satisfactory method is the open sauce pan with a small amount of water. Cook them only until tender as there is a tendency to mushiness when overcooked.

Red vegetables such as red cabbage and beets bleed during cooking. A teaspoon of vinegar added to a pint of water for cooking these foods will brighten the color. The beet stems should be cut no closer than one inch to the vegetable so as to preserve the color and mineral.

Yellow tinged vegetables such as onions, turnips, celery and white cabbage should be cooked for only a short period. Over cooking brings out a strong flavor which many persons find indigestible.

The yellow vegetables—carrots, pumpkins and squash seem little affected by cooking. To preserve their food value cook in a small amount of water and only until tender.

The greater part of food value lost in vegetable cookery is found in the water. Think twice before pouring off the natural juices of vegetables.

Preserving the Food Value

Baking a vegetable in its skin is considered the best method of cookery as there is practically no loss of minerals or vitamins.

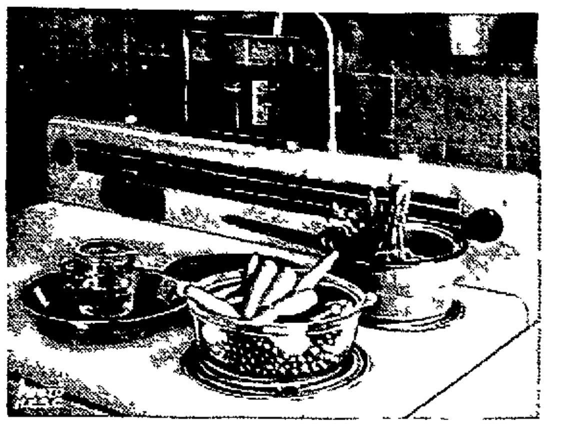
Steaming comes next and is satisfactory with the exception of green vegetables which lose their color when cooked in a closed container. This is because the acids are retained and not allowed to escape in steam.

Boiling in the skin is the next method in preference. If vegetables must be peeled they should be cooked whole or cut lengthwise and never crosswise. A good lesson to remember is that all vegetables bleed the same as beets when cut.

Vegetables cooked in a small amount of water have a greater vitamin content, better flavor, texture and more food value.

Cook vegetables with the idea of keeping them as nearly as possible natural in appearance, flavor and color.

VEGETABLES THAT LOOK AND TASTE GOOD



Asparagus washed, trimmed and cooked standing; peas, potatoes and carrots steamed in half cup of water comes to the table in all their natural goodness.

RECIPES FOR VEGETABLES

Spiced Squash

Clean six squash well with a brush. Split in halves and place skin side down on a baking dish. Blend together a mixture of six tablespoons brown sugar, one teaspoon of cinnamon and one-eighth teaspoon salt. Sprinkle over squash allowing the full amount for the six squash. Bake in a moderate oven until tender which takes about thirty minutes for young squash. Remove from stove, place a teaspoon of butter on each piece and return to oven only long enough to melt. Serve in baking dish.

Spinach Timbales

Two cups cooked spinach, two eggs, one cup milk, two tablespoons butter, two tablespoons cheese cut fine and one-half teaspoon salt.

Chop the spinach very fine. Beat the egg yolks, add the milk, the melted butter, the cheese and seasoning. Mix with the spinach, fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Fill well greased timbales or a ring mold with this mixture, place in a pan of hot water and bake in an oven at 300 degrees F until firm. Serve with a tomato sauce if desired.

Vegetable Loaf

One egg, one cup cooked string beans cut into small pieces, one cup ground raw carrots, one small onion chopped, one cup tomatoes fresh or canned, one-half cup ground peanuts, one cup boiled rice or soft bread crumbs, one-half teaspoon salt.

Beat the egg and add the other ingredients. Mix well and bake in a well greased bread pan at a temperature of 375 degrees F until the loaf is firm. Turn out on a hot platter and garnish with bacon curls and tomato sections.

Cream of Spinach Soup

Two quarts fresh spinach or two cups cooked spinach, one cup boiling water, three cups thin white sauce, one teaspoon grated onion, half teaspoon salt.

Pick over the spinach and wash thoroughly. Add the boiling water and cook the spinach only until tender. Press through a sieve saving all the juice. Add both juice and pulp to the thin white sauce and the seasoning. Sprinkle with paprika just before serving.

French Fried Cauliflower

Scrub cauliflower thoroughly with a fine brush. Rinse in cold water. Steam only until tender. Dry and cool. Dip into a batter made of one and one-fourth cups flour, one teaspoon salt, two eggs and two-thirds cup milk. Sift together the dry ingredients and add the liquid slowly to make a smooth batter. Dip the cauliflower into the batter, drain and fry in deep fat that has been heated to 3[illegible] degrees F or that will brown a cube of bread in 40 seconds. Drain on unglazed paper and serve hot. Delicious with baked ham.

Ronald Afraid to Write Marion Because of Carolyn

I WAS MILDLY astonished when Ronald said that he did not know how he was going to get word to Marion of his decision to carry out their original plans for the Yale Derby Day at New Haven without Carolyn catching on that there ever had been a hiatus in them.

It seemed to me that if it had been possible without Carolyn's knowledge for him to send the letter to Marion which had so frightened her with its devastating news he ought to be able to get another letter to her assuring her that everything was all right.

"But the other letter reached her without Carolyn's knowledge," I said, putting on an inquiring inflection into my voice.

"Yes, I know," he answered with no lightening of the despondency in his voice. "But I can't turn the trick twice that I used in getting that letter to Marion."

He paused while his eyes roved the horizon as if in search of words.

"You see," he said at last, "I've never written anything before to Marion that I wasn't willing to have Carol or Mrs. Underwood see."

He came to a dead stop again while I remembered something I once had unwittingly overheard Carolyn say to Marion.

Talk of Letters

They had been strolling past the open door of my room and had come to a stop outside it. Without being seen I could not get up and close my door even if I had not known that they cared no whit if any member of the family heard their chatter.

"I wish you wouldn't leave Ronald's scribblings open around the room," Carolyn said with a pettish note in her voice.

"You leave yours from Ronald all over the place," Marion retorted, but with a certain conscious note in her voice that told me she knew that her letters were different from Carolyn's even if the sentiments in them were camouflaged by carefully selected phraseology.

"And I suppose that's a slice off the same loaf," Carolyn gibed scornfully. "Oh, of course I know old Ron bends backward in writing to you because he knows that your mother isn't exactly broadcasting a Christmas cantata of joy over him."

"You know what's wrong, Carol," Marion interrupted hotly. "Mums does like him—"

"For himself and by himself, darling," Carolyn countered, while I grimaced to myself at the shrewdness of her reading of Lillian's attitude toward her brother.

Not Son In Law

"But as a possible future son-in-law, even if years removed," she went on, "nay, nay, dearie. You know that as well as I do and I suppose you can't blame her. Mothers are like that, I guess.

"Anyway, I'm never sure that he isn't going to break over the traces in his letters. I wish you'd lock 'em up instead of leaving 'em strewn all over. It's awfully inconvenient for me to walk around with my eyes elevated to heaven. I'm likely to get a nasty fall."

"Oh, do shut up, Carol," Marion adjured laughingly. "You know I leave them so you can read them too—the same way that you show Pone to me."

To my relief the colloquy ended on that note, or at least they continued it out of my earshot, for they went on down the stairs. But the remembrance of it assured me that Ronald was truthful in his assertion concerning his letters.

I did not know whether he was hesitating because he was at a loss for words or whether he expected some comment from me. I ventured one with unhappy results.

"I am sure Mrs. Underwood appreciates your delicacy," I said.

Ronald's face assumed suddenly a 'who-cares-if-she-does' expression.

"I am afraid that angle of it [illegible] interest me much," [illegible] said [illegible].

* * *

RONALD'S STIFF con[illegible] that Lillian's appreciation of his de[illegible] in writing nothing to Marion the world could not see did [illegible] interest [illegible] much was not surprising to me. But it was a bit saddening for it opened up possibilities for future unhappiness for both my dearest friend and this clean-cut, high-minded, handsome youth who was so much in love with her winsome daughter.

There is nothing so conducive to family unhappiness as in-law complexes, and although I knew I was rather ridiculous in view of Ronald's age and Marion's to consider seriously the possibility of marriage between them, yet I also knew that many school romances between students as young as these had resulted in marriage.

Therefore it behooved any one who loved these two to give careful consideration to the problem looming up because of Lillian's antagonism to Marion's interest in Ronald and the boy's natural resentment of the attitude.

Ignores Remark

But ever before me was the adage concerning fools who rush in to deal with problems which sapient angels let severely alone. Ignoring Ronald's [illegible] I said with interest:

"Do you mind telling me how you managed to convey the letter to Marion containing the news which worried her so deeply?"

Ronald flushed. Evidently the remembrance of his experience was not a very pleasant one.

"Why, I sent it enclosed in one to Mrs. Barnes," he said. "In my note to Mrs. Barnes I explained that if she thought she had to read the letter it was all right with me—you know they sometimes censor the letters from boys up there."

I nodded, for I did indeed know the meticulous care the head mistress of Whitney Hall takes in guarding the girls entrusted to her.

"But I told her," Ronald went on hastily, "that I wanted to be sure Carolyn saw no line of it." I emphasized the truth that Carolyn would not read Marion's letters, but that Marion generally tossed them over to her or left them lying around so that Carol could not help seeing them, and that there was something in this one which would frighten and distress Carolyn if she should happen to read it.

"I also told Mrs. Barnes," Ronald said, "that I would rather she did not read this particular letter unless she thought she must. Do you think she did think it was her duty to read it?"

"I am very sure she did not read it, Ronald," I said decidedly, as a vision of the wise and kindly face of Whitney Hall's gracious head mistress rose before me. "Mrs. Barnes has the most common sense of any woman I know. She also had infinite delicacy of feeling and censoring letters is a distasteful task to her.

"I know she never does it unless she is convinced that the action is necessary, and there is nothing in the history of our friendship with Marion which would justify her in her own eyes in reading that particular letter."

Ronald Relieved

Ronald gave a sigh of relief.

"I am glad to hear you say that," he said. "It was what I had figured out for myself, but it's good to hear you back it up."

He stopped and searched the horizon again with troubled eyes.

"But you see, don't you," he said when he finally found speech, "that I can't come whining to her another time and ask her to give Marion a second letter which Carol is not to see. I wouldn't blame her for beginning to lift her nose and sniff a bit."

"Yes, I see you couldn't very well ask Mrs. Barnes to play messenger a second time," I said, and Ronald's face was suddenly downcast.

"I knew you'd agree with me," he said, then added whimsically, "but it gives me a jolt to hear you say it. But what am I going to do? I don't want to leave Marion worrying her head off down there alone, for you're alone if you can't tell people things," he added, and my lips quirked irresistibly as I pictured the loneliness of Whitney Hall.

"And yet how can I get her word without Carol's catching on that something's up? Dad isn't out of the woods yet, you know, and there's no need of her knowing anything about this mess ever, or at least until there's nothing left to worry about."

"Have you thought of this very obvious fact, Ronald?" I asked quietly, "that Mrs. Barnes will not censor a letter addressed to Marion in my handwriting and enclosed in one to her?"

Buckeye Battlers.

The important difference between Ohio Republicans and Democrats in the 1936 campaign seems to be that Republicans are confident they can defeat Martin L. Davey with John W. Bricker as their candidate, but Democrats are not sure they could reelect Mr. Davey against a far less worthy opponent than Mr. Bricker.

To put it mildly, the Democratic party in the state is not in harmony. It is suffering from the same malady which bothers the national organization—a leader who cannot command the united support of his followers. There are Davey Democrats and anti-Davey Democrats. The question is. Can they be brought together for the sake of the party?

Mr. Bricker, sounding the keynote of his campaign at the Republican state convention Wednesday, seemed to think the breach is too wide to be closed. Apparently, it is going to be his purpose to remind Democrats constantly that they don't like each other, which seems a permissible enough thing in politics wherein almost everything is permissible.

The Buckeye Battlers are going to be relatively obscure in the 1936 free-for-all, but the fighting they will do is bound to have a pronounced effect on the larger contest. Mr. Bricker has a good chance to help Gov. Landon carry Ohio. Gov. Davey is important to President Roosevelt for the same reason, but unfortunately he cannot be sure that next November's voting will not prove him a liability instead of an asset to the national ticket.

As has been the case so often, Democrats do not need to apologize for their ability to carry on a good political fight, but only for their tendency to practice on each other. Whatever else Gov. Davey has been able to do, he has not been able to establish harmony in his own party. Many of its members feel sure, in fact, that he hasn't even tried very hard.

Another Revolution.

The new constitution for Soviet Russia has been approved by the presidents of the various republics and in November will be presented for general approval to an all-union congress of Soviets. Distinguished by provisions which will produce sweeping changes in Russian life, the document might be said to be revolutionary in its nature."

Discarding the language and ideas of the 1923 constitution, the new document makes no reference to international socialism or class hatred. Instead, it stresses the success of Russia's own experiment in socialism and then goes on to outline the concessions toward democracy that now can be made to the people.

Prominent among those points are provisions for universal suffrage from the age of 18, without class distinctions, for a supreme court elected indirectly by the people; freedom of the press and speech; for the secret ballot and secrecy of the mails; for equal rights for men and women; for the replacement of the present central executive committee by a supreme soviet of about 556 deputies elected by the people.

Other provisions which call for the setting up of a second legislative chamber based on nationalistic divisions and allow for recall of elected deputies are among the host of changes which mark this unusual document. Even though the basic economic philosophy and practice will be maintained, a certain amount of private farming and trade will be permitted—so long as the operators do not profit from the labor of others.

It hardly can be denied that the constitution proposes taking steps toward reasonableness. Nor does there seem to be much point to arguing that the dictators are making these concessions toward liberalism unwillingly or that they are bowing to the realities of human nature. Rather, it appears more important to wait until after November to make sure the dictatorship still does not exist between the scenes. If it does not, Russia undoubtedly will have moved forward.

A Fine Frenzy.

Recently a national questionnaire asked a large number of persons how they would vote if they had to choose between two parties, conservative and liberal. Slightly more than half those questioned leaned to conservatism as a general principle. Speaking before the Advertising Federation of America last Wednesday, Raymond Moley, former Roosevelt aid, declared "it is significant that the word conservative is coming back into the realm of respectability."

Neither the results of the questionnaire nor Mr. Moley's statement can be taken as proofs of how the 1936 election will go, but they indicate that an old, a reliable, American attitude is reasserting itself. If the issue before the voters were sheared to a choice between the labels of conservative and liberal, there is reason to believe a majority would shy from the implications of the matter. They would sense that American progress, astounding as it has been has been made possible by an enlightened conservatism.

In that issue lies the main quarrel many thoughtful persons have with the Roosevelt administration. In the dark days of 1933, when it might be said the American people had frightened themselves into a state of fear, unusual methods were justified. The fine frenzy of President Roosevelt's vigorous actions, although perhaps planless and unorthodox, probably did much to restore confidence. But Americans always have been willing to leave beaten paths to meet emergencies. With equal promptness and good judgment they have returned to the known road when the storm passed.

This, then, is the chief indictment of Mr. Roosevelt. He helped to put Americans back on the broad highway of normalcy, but he still insists we must scatter headlong into the side roads of experimentation. He is not in touch with majority sentiment in America.

[illegible] as the grocer, [illegible] the doctor or anyone [illegible] $7,451 invested in an [illegible] little is the difference the [illegible] the lawyer or the doctor must invest his own money for [illegible] knowledge. Other persons have invested their money for the workman's [illegible] in the industry with which he is [illegible].

[illegible] of the American industrial system of the workman's stake in the [illegible] which employs him takes on added significance when standards of living in the United States are compared with standards in other countries.

N. W. Ayer & Son Inc. of Philadelphia, business consultants for 67 years makes some interesting observations in a recent study finding:

That the American workman lives better [illegible]

[illegible]

We are [illegible]

[illegible]

The investment of no less than $7,451 per job is proof of the part of our civilization. Further proof of industrial opportunity is [illegible] of power per industrial worker:

Country	Number of Workers	Total Horsepower	H P Per Worker
United States	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
G. Britain	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Italy	[illegible]	[illegible]	2.14
France	[illegible]	5,917,191	1.78
Canada	[illegible]	1,474,500	2.17

Jobs don't grow, they are made. The American industrial system has forged ahead. It lays no claim to perfection, but it has produced results for the country in which it operates which cannot be matched under any other system in any nation on earth.

This was in accordance with an understanding he had when he took the position more than a year previous. He had agreed to take the post and hold it until a reorganization was effected.

Religious Royalists On New Deal List

Secretary Wallace, Roosevelt Advisor, Writes Book Outlining New Theory of Government.

By DAVID LAWRENCE

Copyright, 1936, by The Marion Star

WASHINGTON, July 6—Religious royalists may be added during the present campaign to the field of political royalists and economic royalists who are to do battle at the polls this year.

Secretary Wallace of the department of agriculture, who may be said at the moment to be President Roosevelt's most effective adviser, has just written a book called "Whose Constitution?" in which he outlines a sort of American adaptation of fascism in which a supreme council shall issue mandates from the seat of government in Washington telling capital and labor, agriculture and business just where to head in under a planned economy.

Mr. Wallace pays his respects to the property-owners of the country who, he thinks, are given special protection under the Constitution and he undertakes also to criticize the churches for their failure to inaugurate "an effective discipline" on property accumulations. He is especially caustic about Protestantism, which he thinks in our industrial centers is too identical with the upper class way of life. But here is the quotation in which, for some unexplained reason, the church is brought into the discussion of a scheme for the political governance of the nation. Mr. Wallace writes:

"Somewhat in the manner that judicial interpretation was to deny both federal and state power to regulate modern business in the United States, the Protestant ethic, freed from the restraints of the Roman church, failed to develop an effective discipline for the social administration of great accumulations of property. In both cases a wide 'twilight zone' was created, in which the jungle law of tooth and nail prevailed.

"Many aspects of the Protestant faith no longer grip the imagination of the people of the United States as was once the case, but the great middle class especially in the farm region still works, diets, accumulates, and trains the children of the next generation in the same spirit as always, even though the fine points of doctrine have been almost completely lost.

"In the great industrial centers a curious transformation has taken place. In these areas Protestantism has become to a considerable extent identical with the upper-class way of life. The essential faith of this class is a belief in hard work thrift, saving the sacredness of capital, and the moral right of such a group to continue to govern, protect and reap the rewards of a good life . . .

"Probably no social approach to reality was better adapted to rapidly expanding wealth production than the Protestant approach. Unfortunately, it has not been quite well adapted to wealth distribution and wealth consumption in line with the doctrines of the New Testament."

The inference that might be drawn from Mr. Wallace's book is that thrift, saving, and the right to profit and the reaping of the rewards of a good life are somehow out of favor with the new deal. It so happens that the religious discussion is but a small part of Mr. Wallace's book and becomes significant only as the President's spokesman undertakes to show that there must be a supreme power of some kind in government because the citizens are unable really to govern themselves through associations of their own choosing. Thus Mr. Wallace writes:

"[illegible] to be for a [illegible] welfare. There [illegible] that organized farmers or [illegible] the long [illegible] on behalf of the general welfare than organized business . . .

"On several occasions I have suggested that sooner or later there should be a council for the general welfare."

Mr. Wallace [illegible] this can be accomplished within the Constitution by simple process of judicial interpretation. He emphasizes the need for greater power in the national government and it would appear that if a new set of judges were appointed there would be ample power available for the new deal to accomplish its objectives. His whole argument is based on the contention that the "general welfare" clause of the Constitution is ample for the exercise of federal paternalism. It is [illegible] the respect, but if it were so, there never would have been any need in the first place for any other articles in the Constitution except the one about general welfare. The federal congress would have had in the name of the general welfare the right to do almost anything it pleased with federal funds and with federal authority.

Behind the News

Men and Affairs Under The Washington Spotlight.

BY PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, July 6—Another important governmental reform has passed away without benefit even of the usual obituary notice.

Coordinator Eastman who was to have set the railroads in order expired officially last June 16 of negation. Congress not only failed to extend his term as coordinator but neglected to pass a 90-day appropriation which would have permitted him to publish the reports he has been writing about railroad troubles.

The end came abruptly. It has been generally understood on the inside that no one would object to the 90-day arrangement, but near the end of the session, with the senate involved in a filibuster, everyone interested in Coordinator Eastman was apparently looking out the window.

The inside fact is that congress failed to act by the unanimous consent of all concerned—President Roosevelt, the railroads, railroad labor and the Interstate Commission.

Three Years

These last three years have been bad for all coordinators, but especially for Coordinator Eastman. What happened to him was this.

The railroads were always against him, because they were required to pay about 10 cents a mile to finance his investigations. Railroad labor lost interest in his activities suddenly after the consolidations agreement was reached with the railway executives, guaranteeing the workers against being thrown out of work by consolidations of terminal facilities. All his fellow commissioners on the ICC, except one, reached the unofficial conclusion some months ago that his coordinating was a nuisance and interfered with their work. To make it unanimous, the coordinator is said to have had some sharp personal difference of opinion with Mr. Roosevelt at a White House conference not long ago.

This just about left Mr. Eastman himself as the only one favoring his activities. He suffered the experience and unhappy fate of all coordinators. It marks the end, temporarily at least, of the railroad reform program, except such efforts as may be undertaken by the ICC.

Skittish

New deal lawyers are inwardly skittish about making a test of the Wagner labor act in the supreme court.

One appeal assailing the act has already been filed by an Arkansas lumber company, but it involves technical grounds which may not furnish a constitutional test. Two circuit courts have decided against the government in big cases, the Fifth circuit at New Orleans in the Jones & Laughlin case and the Sixth at Cincinnati in the Freuhoff case. Other circuit court decisions are coming along this summer.

But the lawyers here do not like these cases. They would rather wait to see if a better case develops during the summer. The choice will not be made until the last minute, probably about Sept. 15. The truth is they do not feel any too sure of their position.

Taxes

It is beginning to be evident to the treasury tax men that there will have to be another new tax bill next year, no matter who wins the election.

All the faults in this latest bill will not appear until it has been in force for a while, but some are beginning to develop daily as regulations administering it are being composed.

The situation was best described by a senator, commenting on the contention that the new corporate tax theory is merely a technical plugging of the loopholes through which large personal holding companies have been escaping taxation. Said he.

"We have plugged the loophole with a balloon."

Alphabet

Latest ingredient in the alphabet soup is the unique BEB. It is unique because it is the only one of the new deal agencies which has so far avoided any publicity whatsoever.

This Beach Erosion board was set up under existing legislation dealing with rivers and harbors for the purpose of solving beach erosion along the costs.

Travel

Fagged congressmen usually turn their thoughts to travel near the end of each session. They put through a few resolutions appropriating funds enabling them to investigate such pleasant vacation spots as the national parks, the Panama canal, far eastern relations, etc., etc. Last year half of congress went to the Philippines, by way of Japan, China and points east.

This year, however, the boys lost their imagination. When no one was looking near the end of the session there was adopted a resolution merely authorizing a senate committee to "investigate the steamship service to South America and South Africa."

An appropriation of only $5,000 was authorized for that important purpose. One explanation is that the investigating senators will receive their transportation more or less free.

And called Gilhuly's. It is proprietored by two old-fashioned brothers who nearly went broke obeying the prohibition law. Indeed they were getting ready to hang up the shutters when repeal came in. Instead they installed a bar, put in a dozen tables with clean cotton cloths and dishes of pickles and coleslaw. Then they teamed up with Ma Stanley, who went broke trusting jobless actors at her eatery in the 40s. Ma Stanley, with her white hair, black silk dress and grandma-like smile, sits at the left of the door welcoming patrons. Also she makes lemon pies with four fingered meringue top. The Gilhulys, smiling their Irishry in neat white coats are ready to pounce upon and throw out anyone slightly stewed. They hate to see ladies smoke. They say "We don't mind it so much, but the longshoremen object, so lady, would you mind please?" Prunes, prisms and propriety are the watch word—or words at Gilhuly's.

Twilight Softball Loop Races Approach Home Stretch

NINTH ROUND OF 14-GAME SCHEDULE SET FOR PLAY THIS WEEK

Favorites Hold Only Slight Leads, Crucial Series of Games Begin

By CHARLES HOSTETLER
Marion Star Sports Writer

Twilight league softball teams are nearing the home stretch of their pennant drives as the schedule reaches the ninth round of a 14 game schedule this week. Although each league has its established favorites enough contests remain that the pennant hopes of any of the leaders may easily be shattered.

In Sunday School league No. 1 Lee Street and Forest Lawn are sharing the top position in the standings. Both aggregations have played seven games, won six and postponed one.

Games Tonight

The squads will defend their positions tonight when Lee Street meets the Epworth Seniors at Garfield park and Forest Lawn clashes with Epworth No. 1 at the Marion Steam Shovel athletic field. Lee Street may experience trouble when the team meets the Presbyterians Wednesday night on the same field in a game which was postponed from last Monday. The Presbies are trailing close behind the leaders with three victories in six contests. Other No. 1 loop games tonight will bring together Trinity Baptist and Presbyterians at Lincoln park and Reformed and St. Mary at the Presidents field. Two other postponed conflicts will be played Wednesday night with Epworth No. 1 meeting St. Mary at Garfield park and Trinity Baptist clashing with Reformed at the Presidents field.

Five of the entries in Sunday School league No. 2 are closely bunched in the standings all with averages of 500 per cent or better. Epworth Bishops head the loop with seven games in the victory column out of eight played. Salem and Wesley are tied with only two defeats in the same number of conflicts. St. Mary has lost but three of its eight contests and Christian has split in a like number of attempts. Games in No. 2 loop tomorrow night will match Calvary and Salem at the Marion Steam Shovel athletic field, United Brethren and Wesley at Garfield park, Christian and St. Mary at the Presidents field. The Epworth Bishops seventh entry in the loop will be idle this week.

Huber Heads Commercials

With the unbeaten Huber team leading the pack five entries in the Commercial league are scrapping for positions in the top half of the standings. Huber has won seven consecutive games, has postponed one and will clash with the Keytown Campers in a Thursday night game at the Marion Steam Shovel athletic field. Prospect and the Marion Steam Shovel team are both perched on the second rung of the league ladder with averages of 714 having won five of seven games while the Marion Merchants and Keytown Campers are deadlocked at an even 500 per cent. The Merchants [illegible] split in six [illegible] Campers have [illegible] in each of [illegible].

OLYMPIC FINALS TO BE HELD THIS WEEK

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK, July 6. The athletic decks were cleared today for the final Olympic track and field tryouts Saturday and Sunday at the new Randalls Island stadium.

About 300 athletes picked on the basis of sectional tryouts or past performances will compete for about 60 remaining places on the American track and field team.

Already ten Olympians have been named as a result of final tests in four events: the marathon, 10,000 meter run, 50,000-meter walk and decathlon. There are 22 Olympic events including the 400 and 1,600 meter relays. This here will be competition in 17 individual events this coming week-end.

The National A. A. U. championships completed Saturday at Princeton demonstrated that most of the Olympic favorites along with a number of new comers to stardom are ripe for another record smashing battle.

Such stalwarts as Jesse Owens of Ohio State, Don Lash of Indiana, Forrest (Spec) Towns of Georgia, Glenn (Slats) Hardin of Louisiana State and Glenn Cunningham of Kansas came through with decisive title victories.

The latest pole vault sensation, 22-year-old George Varoff of the Olympic club, San Francisco, hoisted himself over the bar at the new world record height of 14 feet 6½ inches to make Uncle Sam forget that the previous world holder, Keith Brown, is available.

JULY 4 AUTO RACES POSTPONED BY RAIN

Event Held Over to July 12, 1,500 Persons Gather Despite Weather

Because of the heavy rain Saturday morning the automobile races at the Marion County fair grounds were postponed until Sunday, July 12. Twenty-two racing cars from all parts of the country had arrived late Friday and early Saturday to participate in the event.

The muddy condition of the track resulted in the postponement after a conference of fair board officials and H. W. Miller, director of the races. Tickets for the races will be honored next Sunday, Mr. Miller said in announcing the postponement.

Miller estimated more than 1,500 persons assembled Saturday for the races despite the rain.

STARS OF MAJORS TO CLASH TUESDAY

National Leaguers Have Edge in Batting Power

By The Associated Press

BOSTON, July 6—The National league will concede about 25 points in batting to the American league sluggers when the two major circuits line up for the annual All-Star baseball game.

Manager Joe McCarthy has at his disposal an array of American league sluggers hitting for about 334.

The question seems to be whether Manager Charlie Grimm's outfit of circuit representatives hitting for 31[illegible] has the pitchers to subdue such clubbers as Lou Gehrig, young Joe DiMaggio and Bill Dickey of the Yankees, Jimmy Foxx of the Red Sox, Earl Averill of the Indians and Charley Gehringer of the Tigers.

The starting pitching berth on the National leaguers seems to be between St. Louis' Dizzy Dean and Chicago's Curt Davis.

Manager McCarthy has two stellar southpaws available—Lefty Grove and Vernon Gomez—but whether he will open with one of them against the National league's many right handed batters is uncertain.

The game will be played under World series rules at 12:30 p. m. (E. S. T.) at Boston National league park. The park seats 42,000. All reserved seats have been taken.

Your Health

BY DR. R. S. COPELAND

Asthma.

Asthma in a child is one of the most difficult problems presented the physician. It is bad enough in its acute form. But it is also the forerunner of chronic asthma not infrequently found among adults.

Asthma is not an infectious disease. It is not "catching." Yet, it is a real menace to the general health. When it attacks the very young child it often leads to complications. These may interfere with the growth and normal development.

The actual cause of asthma is not known. Several known factors play an important part in producing it. Heredity influences most cases. The histories of more than 50 per cent of the sufferers from asthma show that one or the other parent had the disease. A generation may be missed but it is in a sense "in the blood."

Children with asthma are frequently the victims of certain associated diseases. They may suffer from attacks of sick headache, dizziness and certain disturbances of the skin.

Like the adult, the young sufferer from asthma is "allergic" to certain substances. By this is meant that the victim is hypersensitive to some foods or materials which have no unpleasant effect on the average person. These substances may be air-borne, taken in through the breathing organs.

In most instances the unhappy child has some disturbance in the lymphoid tissues of the body. For example, the tonsils may be diseased or adenoids may be present. Sometimes the nasal sinuses are not normal. In any event there is a sensitivity to protein substances and asthmatic attacks are frequent.

It is well to have diseased and enlarged tonsils removed. The same is true of adenoids. X-ray pictures should be taken to determine whether or not the nasal sinuses are involved.

Special skin tests should be made to determine whether some substance is having an allergic effect. If such sensitiveness is found, it is often possible to overcome it by the injection of an appropriate vaccine.

The diet is important. Since milk and eggs are common offenders, often leading to asthmatic attacks, they may be omitted from the diet to see if benefit results. Other foods such as fish, fruits and cereals may prove irritating.

FOUR HURT AS TRAINS HIT NEAR CLEVELAND

Carrier Halts To Check Trouble; Second Section Fails To See It in Fog.

By The Associated Press

CLEVELAND, July 6 — Four persons received minor injuries early today when the second section of the Big Four railroad's Missourian ran into the first section near North Eaton, southwest of here.

The limited train was enroute from St. Louis to New York, with 11 cars in the first section and four in the second. The injured were brought to a Cleveland hospital.

The four in the hospital gave their names as E. A. Smiley of Cleveland, sprained back; Mrs. Smiley, cuts and bruises; Miss Lulu Whitehead of Louisville, Ky., sprained back, and Mrs. Eve Kupitnick of Lynn, Mass., scalp wound.

Miss Whitehead said she was sleeping when she heard a crash and found herself on the floor of the sleeping car.

D. A. Fawcett, train master at Bellefontaine, said the train crew of the first section stopped to investigate whether some object was dragging under the wheels.

The second section, proceeding with caution through a dense fog, was unable to stop in time to prevent a collision, although it was going only about 20 miles an hour, he said.

"BALL OF FLAME" SETS FOREST AFIRE

By The Associated Press

SHERIDAN, Wyo., July 6—Fire which a rancher said was started by a "ball of flame," possibly a crashing airplane, raged today in the Big Horn National forest 75 miles northwest of here.

While 200 CCC workers and volunteers sought to check the flames, which had destroyed more than 500 acres, Forest Ranger Clyde Dickson said they had found no trace of any plane and none had been reported missing.

He said, however, John Debarth, a rancher, reported seeing a ball of fire plunge into the timber and set it ablaze. Debarth, while uncertain of its nature, said the falling object might have been an airplane.

CCC TO ENROLL 16 MORE FROM COUNTY

Registration To Begin Tuesday and End Friday at Relief Headquarters.

Marion county's quota for a new enlistment in the federal government's civilian conservation corps was announced today by F. S. Burns, deputy CCC enrolling agent. Sixteen youths, three of them colored, and four alternates will be given the opportunity to join the CCC July 14. In addition to the regular quota, four camp cooks from Marion county, will also be enlisted at that time.

The only restrictions on those who wish to enroll is that they are from 17 to 25 years of age, residents of the county, and members of relief or non-relief families. However, if others wish to join, they may do so by assigning $25 of their pay each month to families listed on the relief rolls, Mr. Burns explained.

Registration will begin tomorrow and continue through Friday and may be made at Mr. Burns' office in the relief headquarters building at 131 South Prospect street. His office will be open each day from 8:30 a. m. to 4 p. m. It is probable that the group will be permanently located in camps of this district which includes Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Mr. Burns said.

RULES BAR FURTHER GAINS IN GRAIN PIT

Prices Skyrocket to Limit at Start on News of Extended Drouth Damage

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO July 6 — Supposed remedies to protect interests of grain growers transformed themselves into a barricade today against owners of grain collecting more than strictly limited profits

For hours grain trading was at virtually a complete halt and no immediate further benefit to farmers or others on whatever grain they might have salvaged from crop ruin was possible

Wheat and all other grain closed strong with wheat up 5 cents July 105¼ Sept 106¼ corn 4 cents advanced Sept 75¼ Dec 70¼ oats at 3 cents gain and provisions showing a rise of 7 to 70 cents
